THE RED CLAY BATTLE

WITH CAPT. FEARLESS

The huge ant crawled over the dead Jap's face. They all knew he was dead. Farrell, McClure and Garino. He lay in the red clay about fifteen feet from the fox-hole in the blistering sun. Wilson, however, wasn't so sure. He stood tensely at the end of the over-sized fox-hole staring at the Jap. The ant stopped its erratic flight momentarily, then raced up the saffron face and investigated the glassy eye-ball. Not a muscle of the Jap's face twitched.

Farrell, McClure and Garino repeated he was dead. Evidently Wilson wasn't convinced, for slowly and calmly he eased his 45 out of its holster and held it at eye level. His index finger coiled about the trigger and contracted three times and three times he shot the Jap in the chest. The Oriental's body jerked violently and a bloody froth bubbled through his cracked lips. A wheezing sigh issued from the half-opened mouth and the body relaxed. Startled, the ant raced down the brown chest and off into the clay.

"Jeez, Loo-tenint," Garino rushed up and grabbed his arm. "He's dead, what's the use of shooting him again."

The officer calmly holstered his automatic and turned to the sweating, ashen-faced Marine. "That Jap wasn't dead, fellal! Look," pointing towards the Jap's chest.

"I don't see nothing but blood and sweat, Loo-tenint."

The Jap's arms and chest, covered by dust, were streaked with runnels of sweat.

"That's just the point, Sergeant," said Wilson, "dead men don't sweat. Look at his left hand."

The sergeant peered over the parapet and scrutinized the Jap's left hand, partially hidden by his body. "Jeez," he murmured, "a grenade."

"Exactly," said the lieutenant, turning to the others. "That Nip was only waiting for us to turn our backs so he could make hash of us with that hand bomb. You got to watch these guys, they're experts at muscular control. Well, let's prepare for the counter-attack."

The four men began examining their weapons and Wilson went over and inspected a small mortar set up in the middle of the pit. The sun rose higher in a sky of brass and Tonquil Island broiled in the tropical heat. The scraggly circle of Japs slowly contracted on the beleaguered Marines. The machine-gun fire overhead became hotter and they crouched lower in their shelter, preparing to sell their lives dearly.

In the Jap lines Colonel Kyushu ordered a flank attack. "We shall cover ourselves with glory," said he. "We shall rush them under cover of mortar fire. Forward! For the Emperor and Tojo."

The forty Japanese leaped from their shell-hole and raced across the clearing toward the Americans. About one hundred yards from the Marines, the Japs dived into a huge crater. They prepared for the final charge, as the American mortar lobbed shells at them in a high arc.

Back in the Yankee fox-hole, Wilson spoke to Garino. "Sergeant," he said tersely, "you once tried out with the Giants as a pitcher, didn't you?"

"Yeah," said Garino uncertainly, "but my arm went back on me."

"Well," said Lieutenant Wilson, "your arm better not go back on you now. There's about forty Japs up in that shell-crater ahead and if you don't do as I say, you won't even have any arms."

He walked over to a small wooden box and took out a half-dozen grenades which he handed to the sergeant.

"See what I mean," said he?

"I think I get it," said Garino through tight lips. He walked to the edge of the excavation and extracted the pin from one of the grenades. With a long overhand sweep, he flung the missile towards the Orientals. In swift succession, he pulled the pins from the rest of the grenades and hurled them in the same manner. The roar of the bombs mingled with the screams of dying men. Silence fell! Garino rubbed his arm and grinned.

The afternoon wore on and piles of Japanese bodies accumulated to putrify in the blistering hot air. Lieutenant Wilson stooped and placed his handkerchief over the face of Sergeant Garino to keep the flies from swarming on the bullet hole in his forehead. All the grenades were gone and Sergeant Garino was dead. Lieutenant Wilson swallowed hard as he covered the dirt-streaked, bloody face. Farrell and McClure looked away.

The Americans had only 25 rounds of rifle ammunition left and the circle of Japs had grown smaller.

Lieutenant Wilson stared at Farrell and McClure and said, "It won't be long, soon."

They slid their rifles over the parapets and said nothing.

High overhead a P-47 Thunderbolt Fighter with Bazooka tubes under the wings circled in reconnaissance. The keen-eyed, lean-jawed man at the controls was Captain Fearless. Glancing over the side of the cockpit, he tilted toward the island and dived. "Looks like Jap mortar fire," he muttered to himself, observing puffs of smoke. "I hope I'm not too late."

The ship screamed as Captain Fearless gave it full throttle. Five hundred yards above the island he let go the right bank of rockets, leveling off and banking sharply. The island shook with terror and a score of Japs sped toward their Oriental Valhalla.

Lieutenant Wilson glanced aloft and his tired face broke into a grin. The other men broke into hoarse shouts of joy.

"Captain Fearless," murmured Wilson hoarsely, "it couldn't be anybody else."

The plane zoomed up sharply and dived again. The left bank of rockets swooshed into the ground one hundred yards to the left of the crouching Marines and another score of Nipponese joined their comrades. The plane banked into a tight circle, with its battery of machine-guns chattering into life. The Japanese wilted as does wheat under the blades of a harvester. After once over lightly, Captain Fearless wobbled the wings of his ship in greeting and signalled he was coming in. Not a Jap was left alive! The Thunderbolt sailed toward the small landing strip at the far end of the island, swooped and made a perfect landing.

Captain Fearless leaped out of the cockpit and strode toward the Marines who were climbing out of their pit. Halfway across the clearing, flanked by mounds of dead Japanese, Lieutenant Wilson shook hands with the great and renowned Captain Fearless.

"A million thanks, Cap, I was sure it was you," Lieutenant Wilson laughed softly.

"Glad to have been of assistance, Lieutenant," said Captain Fearless, glancing around at the windrows of dead Nipponese. "From the looks of this place, there's a lot of Jap family reunions this afternoon. Have you got any chow?"

"K" rations are all we have, Captain, but let's pick a better spot to eat them."

The men left the clearing and walked to the landing strip. In the shadow of the Captain's huge plane, they ate their "K" rations, washing it down with coconut milk.

"Well, I have more work to do," said Captain Fearless, climbing into the cockpit, "so I will let you boys get some sleep."

"Roger," said McClure, "I was getting tired of being awakened right in the middle of the night by those screaming monkeys, Morpheus, here I come."

"Me too," said Farrell.

"I guess I could use a little sleep myself," said Wilson, yawning.

"Happy dreams, boys," smiled Captain Fearless and gunned his plane down the runway.

Then STOP taking it, fellow, and BEGIN doing it out! Here's the great new book on JU-JITSU—the method our Commandos use—the technique that will make you a REAL FIGHTING MAN!

The incredible things you've heard about JU-JITSU may sound like fairy tales—but they're all true. Skinny featherweights do somersault 200 pounds into dreamland... professional boxers and wrestlers do admit that a JU-JITSU expert is too tough for them!

Now you, too, can become an expert—and built just as you are! That's the beauty of JU-JITSU. Yes, even though you weigh less than 100 pounds, you can learn how to bowl over your enemies like a Commando knocking over the Japs. It doesn't take weeks or months. In double quick time—without gadgets, without big muscles—you will be tougher than you ever dreamed. Then imagine how your friends will admire you—how proud your family and that you've become a real fighting man.

GET AS TOUGH AS THE COMMANDOS!

The Rangers and Commandos know JU-JITSU and rely upon it to protect their lives when they find themselves in desperate hand-to-hand combat with Japs and Nazis. The Army, Navy and Marine Corps teach JU-JITSU to our men.

Police and G-Men are experts. Surely, you want to become as tough as these hard-hitting heroes. LIGHTNING JU-JITSU can teach you as it has quickly taught thousands and thousands of other fellows.
